

When searching for books on your topic head to DELCAT Discovery. Typing a full sentence like "How has social media changed the student college experience?", doesn't always return relevant results. Instead try to search for specific words or phrases that capture the main ideas of what you want to search.

DELCAT Discovery contains not just books, but also DVDs, articles, ebooks, internet resources, and much more. If you're only interested in looking at one format type, such as books, it can be helpful to limit your search by clicking on the format facets. This will filter out all other types of sources. You're now only looking at books.

There is one important thing to note when you're using DELCAT Discovery to look up either books or ebooks. DELCAT Discovery contains not only items from our library, but also items from libraries all around the world. Check to make sure that your book says University of Delaware Library on the result if you wish to find books that are held here at UD. If you see WorldCat Libraries noted on the result this indicates that another library in the system has this item but we here at UD do not. You can get books from other libraries by using Interlibrary Loan.

We've talked about how to do a general search in DELCAT Discovery, but what if you already know exactly what book or author you're seeking? Simply type in the title or the full name of the author, and place that title or author name in quotation marks. You can also add TI= or AU= to the beginning of your search to specify that you're looking for a title or specific author. Here's the book with the exact title that we're looking for! Below it our articles about the book or which review this book in magazines or news sources. It looks like this book is available at the UD library.

Let's take a closer look at our book by viewing the full record. You can often read a summary of the books content on this full record and view Table of Contents to see what specifically the book contains. The most important information for finding a book in the library is contained on the lower part of the page. Look for the word "Available", which indicates that the book is on the shelf. If the book has already been borrowed by someone, you will see a date here indicating when the book is expected to be returned. Next in order to find the book, you will need to record the Call Number. The Call Number is the book's address on the shelves. You will need to record the entire call number if you wish to retrieve this book.
