Dr. Margaret Andersen is the Edward and Elizabeth Goodman Rosenberg Professor of Sociology and the Executive Director of the President’s Diversity Initiative at the University of Delaware. She received a B.A. in Sociology from Georgia State University, Atlanta and an M.A. and Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Her research interest of many years is the sociology of race and gender.

Her most recent work is a new book, On Land and On Sea: Woman in the Rosenfield Collection, published by Mystic Seaport Museum. The book is a photographic essay of women across the course of the twentieth century, based on images in the Rosenfeld Collection of Mystic Seaport.

She is the author of several books including Thinking about Women: Sociological Perspectives on Sex and Gender; Race, Class, and Gender (with Patricia Hill Collins); Sociology: Understanding a Diverse Society (with Howard F. Taylor); Sociology: The essentials (with Howard F. Taylor); Understanding Society: Readings in Sociology (with Kim A. Logio); and Social Problems (with Frank R. Scarpitti and Laura L. O’Toole).

Dr. Andersen received the 2006 Jessie Bernard Award given annually by the American Sociological Association for scholarship widening the horizons of Sociology to include women. She received the 2007-08 Robin M. Williams Lecture Award from the Eastern Sociological Society. She was also the 2004 Sociologist for Women (SWS) Feminist Lecturer given annually to someone in the nation whose work benefits women.
